MEAL TIME

WEEK 1:

Ask a kid: Why should you give everyone a chance, no matter how they appear?

Ask a parent: Share about a time when you gave someone a chance and were surprised by what you found.

WEEK 2:

Ask a kid: What is something you can give up to help someone else feel valuable?

Ask a parent: Who are some groups of people that might sometimes feel overlooked?

WEEK 3:

Ask a kid: Why do you think it might make someone sad when a promise is broken?

Ask a parent: What are some things that tempt us to break our promises? How can we overcome those challenges?

WEEK 4:

Ask a kid: What can you do this week to show someone that you see them as valuable?

Ask a parent: Why is it important to give everyone a chance to do something that others might think they can't do?

PARENT TIME

My oldest son is an analytical thinker. He wants to understand why a decision was made. He wants to discuss possible options. He wants to consider the "what if things were different." And he's learned just enough to push at my answers and opinions. Although I want him to be an independent thinker, sometimes these discussions turn to conflict. And more often than I wish, they become all-out fights.

★ Regardless of the outcome of the fight, doesn't it feel like no one really wins when we fight with our families? It feels so destructive and devaluing. Even after we apologize, it can feel like there's still a rift between us.

How might it change our families if we learn to fight for instead of fighting with our family members? In this month's Parent Link Live podcast we'll learn how to change our approach to conflict. Download the podcast on www.OrangeParents.org.
